Booking a Meeting

How to get Blake to book a meeting:

- Speak with a business-like tone
- Make a statement of your availability instead of confusing them with wishy-washy questions
- Share your enthusiasm for your next meeting

This happens because:

They are incredibly goal-oriented people who want everything to serve a purpose, while consistently looking to mitigate things that drain time or resources. If your product won't make a measurable difference in their plan to succeed, they won't want it. Give them enough information to get in a meeting.

Try This

- The biggest inefficiency facing [prospect's role] today is XYZ. The reason you should take this meeting isn't so you can hear things you already know, though.
- You should take this meeting so you can understand why we're the best at solving the problem.
- We will cut the time it takes you to do X by 25%. We can increase your efficiency by 10% in your first month.
